A: The fix ended up being to just use multiple copies of the process instance since it was just a simple round-robin process, so it's not a big deal. Q: Google Sheets: Find cells that have matches in another column but not another column? I'm building out a chart for inventory. To calculate the cost of a sale, I have to look up the inventory cost for what the items were sold for, and compare to what it sold for. In an effort to create a quick fix, I have column Y range defined as the index of the matching cell in a different column. However, I also want to filter this column Y range to only find matches in column J (not column K or Z). I have this working in a google sheet with helper cells in column I. However, it's not working when I add it to the main sheet (mainly because column J is not sorted alphabetically). A: =ARRAYFORMULA(QUERY(IFERROR(VLOOKUP(A:A, I:I, 1, 0),), "where Col1 = "&A1&" or Col2 = "&A1&" or Col3 = "&A1&" ", 0)) 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image display device, and more particularly, to an image display device and a method for driving the same that are capable of improving display quality, e.g., resolution, contrast, and color quality. 2. Discussion of the Related Art With the recent development of information media, such as mobile communication terminals, image display devices are also being developed with a rapid pace. Brings all the best possible qualities of their main product in the same release. In a number of industries, particular in the steel industry, there is a need to transfer steel billets or steel rods from one location to another. One particular example is the manufacture of steel rebar. Typically, during the production of steel rebar, billets or steel rods are cut to a predetermined length and then, in some cases, the billets or rods are further reduced to a desired cross section (e.g., square) by a rolling mill. If, for instance, in the case of a square or round billets or rods, the length of the billets or rods is a set length, then if the billets or rods are to be subsequently processed into a number of other products, such as, for example, steel rebar, then the length of the billets or rods must be further reduced by a suitable technique. One particular example of such a technique is the subject of co-pending patent application Ser. No. 11/333,147 filed Jan. 11, 2006, the disclosure of which is incorporated herein by reference in its entirety. As per the application, an optical reduction mill is used to perform a desired reduction of a steel rod. It would be advantageous, however, to provide a system that is capable of transferring steel billets from one location to another, particularly in instances where the steel billets or rods are moved from one location to another through a chain of production areas which may or may not be rolling mills. As used herein, the term "production area" includes, but is not limited to, such locations where steel billets or steel rods are cut, where steel billets or steel rods are rolled, where a desired reduced steel product is obtained, and/or where a desired steel product is discharged or stored. That is, as used herein, the term "production area" includes locations at which billets or rods are manufactured, reduced and/or processed. In addition, as used herein, when describing the movement or transfer of bil 0cc13bf012

Agitated Chinese investors should not storm U.S. markets Investors look at their screens at the stock exchange in Hangzhou. The Chinese government on Thursday opened the door to a more speculative stock market, raising fears of a pan-global financial crisis. Photo: Reuters The Chinese government on Thursday opened the door to a more speculative stock market, raising fears of a pan-global financial crisis. At the same time, the government announced a plan to create a "national human resource pool" of up to 60,000 labor-intensive IT professionals by 2015, amid reports of long lines and even violence at IT fairs. A spate of complaints about the capital market is just the most recent example of worsening concerns about China's rapid economic growth, which many complain is creating unsustainable debt levels. Early Thursday, the stock market plunged as far as 27 percent, its worst day since the 2008 global financial crisis. That gave the main Shanghai index an eight-day losing streak. China's economy is expected to grow 9.8 percent this year, according to a preliminary forecast by the nation's National Bureau of Statistics, well ahead of a countrywide average of 9.2 percent. And yet, despite a growing sense of unease about what comes after China's phenomenal economic growth, few are predicting chaos and financial havoc in the world's second-largest economy. Instead, one veteran analyst warned against a storm of unwarranted panic. "The market is experiencing a shake-out of stock prices, and to some extent, in trade-related stocks," said Francis Cheung, global market strategist at J.P. Morgan Funds in Hong Kong. "But I don't think a serious market correction is due in the next few months." After Beijing's shock steps, several foreign brokerage firms pulled out of China last week, while U.S. banks and
