It intersected with both US 1 and US 6 in Groton. In 1934, the road between Groton and Hartford was designated the "Groton Highway" No.1. In 1939, the road was extended westward from Groton to West Groton, where it intersected with US 6. (The route previously followed a land route between West Groton and Hartford). It was then extended to Downtown Hartford. In 1946, it was extended to its current terminus at Interstate 91 (South Main Street). At the same time, the one-way designation was removed from the part of the route in Groton. In 1958, another US 1 bypass of Groton was built, which was at-grade except for a grade-separated section at the intersection with CR 11462. In that year, CR 11462 was extended from Downtown Hartford to Groton. In 1962, the Groton Highway designation was removed. In 1962, the state of Connecticut transferred ownership and maintenance of CR 11462 between downtown Hartford and Groton to the city of Groton. The route was truncated at the western end to its current terminus on I-91 in 1959. Current designations: The state of Connecticut is currently not using route designations. Numbered routes were not adopted until after 1940. Some areas of Connecticut have different designations than others because of the fact that they are listed in the "Connecticut Highway Markers", "A Guide to Connecticut's Highways", or "Connecticut Atlas". Likely uses This route has been marked as a trunk line of the US highway system at times. Truck Route In 1936, the U.S. Bureau of Public Roads (BPR) created the Motor Truck route program. This program was tasked with improving truck routes and identifying them in the highway marking system (HMS). For more information on the truck routes program and the ship markers, click here. Truck routes were added to the highway system after 1936. Truck routes were unmarked.
