Viral load fluctuation of rotavirus infection in a suckling mouse model. Rotavirus infection of the newborn mouse was first reported by Van Deun in 1981. In spite of this, there has been little research into rotavirus infection in perinatal animals. In this study, we examined the kinetics of rotavirus infection of the suckling mouse and the relationship between blood rotavirus titers and virus shedding. Newborn mice of two different strains, Balb/c and DDK, were orally inoculated with the strain Wa to establish an acute rotaviral infection. Blood and fecal rotavirus titers were determined by plaque assay and the level of viral shedding was calculated using the plaque-forming units (pfu)/0.1 ml index. Virus shedding started at day 2 after inoculation and peaked at day 3. Rotavirus shedding from animals of both strains was not sustained at more than three days. The highest values of blood rotavirus titers reached on average 10(5.3) pfu/ml at day 5. A weak positive correlation was noted between the titer of blood rotavirus and the amount of viral shedding. Based on the results of virus shedding, viral titers in blood and stool, we recommend that virus shedding starts about 2 days after inoculation of newborn mice with rotavirus and that the infection should be terminated at more than 3 days, at least for rotaviruses propagated in cultures.$23.95 See the world, and more
