You can find Photoshop tutorials, themes, and resources on the web at ` Many tutorials are free, but to download some of the program's greatest features, you must pay a fee. Additionally, some tutorials require several hours of hands-on training. Applying the Simple Layers (Alteration) Method The old adage of "you aren't a professional until you've graduated from Photoshop" doesn't stand true in today's high-tech world of image manipulation. Many professional photographers and graphic designers use Photoshop to fine-tune photos for the Web, print, and press. Many designers use Photoshop to alter photographs, add stylistic elements, and produce works of art. In fact, Photoshop can now sometimes be thought of as a creative design tool as much as a tool for image editing. In this section, I show you the steps for creating and manipulating your images using the simple layer method. (See Book III, Chapters and for more on working with layers.) Although Photoshop CS6 offers a few more features for handling layers, the method is still quite simple. I cover the main steps in this section, but Photoshop CS6 has features to ease your way (refer to Figure 2-4). With the Simple Layers method, you have access to the full range of Photoshop's tools through simple layer-based actions that can be created, saved, and applied to the entire image or any individual layer. You can apply an action to all the layers in an image, and by doing so, you can create a range of filter effects that you can save as an action or that can be applied to a group of layers. Drawing by the Layer After you create an image, it can take several image editing steps to bring it to its final form. The Simple Layers method is a great way to save time and effort. Rather than spend hours tweaking an image with powerful (and non-intuitive) Photoshop tools, a Photoshop user can apply several simple steps to a group of layers that gives an image the look of a hand-painted image. Photoshop's Layers window enables you to create and view and manipulate layers. To open the Layers window and create a new layer, follow these steps: 1. Choose Window⇒Layers to open the Layers window. 2. Click the New Layer button (

Q: How to stream a video live on a website What is the best practice to live stream a video on a website. For example, I have a video from a live streamer with 6 viewers. I need to stream this video on my site with 6 viewers. What is the best approach? A: If you're the one who's hosting the live stream, then you could have a php script that will read the saved video file and play it on your site. Another approach would be to use some sort of broadcasting software, like Camtasia. You can stream live on the network (if you have a server), or you can connect to the internet via a streaming software (there are many that are free). Camtasia Exposing WebRTC functions using Java MEEG_WebRTC[1] (this is a project for Ubuntu, but can be adapted to Windows). Left ventricular filling profile at rest and during exercise by cineangiography. Diastolic changes of left ventricular (LV) filling pattern were examined at rest and at different levels of exercise in 46 patients with coronary artery disease (CAD) and 21 age-matched normal subjects. Left ventricular diastolic dimension decreased during exercise in both CAD and normal subjects. Of 50 CAD patients, 23 were in LV systolic functional class I (group I) and 27 in class II and III (group II and III). Eight patients (group II) had exercise-induced angina pectoris and 19 (group III) did not have angina pectoris during exercise. Normal subjects showed a fall in E-F slope during exercise in proportion to the relative rise in heart rate and without any increase in end-systolic LV volume. This fall in E-F slope was also observed in CAD group I. On the other hand, exercise did not induce any significant change in E-F slope in CAD group II or III. The reduced E-F slope in CAD group I is postulated to be due to the lesser increase in end-systolic volume as compared to the normal subjects.{{ - if and.Values.database.enabled (not.Values.database.user) }} {{ - if and.Values.database.mariadb.enabled (not.Values.database.mariadb.user) }}  WARNING  This configuration is deprecated. Linkbar Sunday, November 13, 2009 Herbivory and Detritivory by Insects in Pyrethrum In a recent post on the USDA's Vegetation & Climate Research Unit website, Entomologist Herbivore Dynamics Laboratory Manager Dr. Rebecca Radeloff writes about the potential importance of habitat degradation as a cause of declines in some populations of the nationally abundant pyrethrum. Herbivory and detritivory by insects on one of their native plants, pyrethrum, may be a factor responsible for the reduction of some populations of this plant in the U.S. In general, pyrethrum displays little susceptibility to attack by most of the butterflies and insects that are among the most important, multibillion-dollar, native insect pollinators in agriculture and horticulture. Nonetheless, the insects may be responsible for substantial defoliation and mortality on the plants in some situations. In a joint paper, "Pyrethrum and some aspects of its insect ecology," we describe how herbivory by some of these insects is the most significant factor in regulating the population cycles of pyrethrum across its native range in the U.S. and Puerto Rico. In the absence of herbivores, pyrethrum populations are predicted to increase indefinitely; the growth rate of plants can increase by more than 100 percent annually. "But attacks by insects in pyrethrum populations may decrease or destroy them, and other factors may also be involved," write the authors. If herbivory is significantly higher than the natural rate, pyrethrum populations can decline or cease to grow after a relatively short time. Detritivory by other insects, mainly forays by soil-dwelling ants, can also weaken pyrethrum plants. "Some pyrethrum populations have always been attacked by insects, others have not. The longevity of many pyrethrum populations, as well as the likelihood of insects affecting them, may depend on where and when they were established in the first place, and on the pattern of local invasion," the authors add. For example, plants established in a native plant community soon after arriving in a new area likely will encounter little insect predation. Natural predators such as birds and bats in native plant communities are rarely effective against pyrethrum, so the insects may be the most important predators. "Some native pyrethrum populations may have been established in place where they have remained because of a lack of
