Slui.exe is an important process in Windows 10. It is responsible for Windows 10 activation, and its process is handled by Windows in a special way. So, it is not recommended to run it manually. Most users don't like the process of identifying a product key, and then inserting it into the appropriate Windows dialog box. Even if you do it correctly, the activation process may fail. You can try running slui.exe 4 to activate Windows 10 manually. Windows 10 activation tools include this process of using slui.exe 4 manually. If your PC runs slowly, or seems to run slowly, then you can have a virus, or other program, hijack your slui.exe.mui file. This way, your program runs smoothly and you get all of your free space back, while at the same time, the program keeps the same code. In this case, the program itself is compromised and runs in the background as an agent.dll. This malicious agent loads into other programs, by default, the SafeBrowsing & ThreatSentry scripts are programmed to run with a full screen view at all times, and automatically run every 20 minutes. This event gets generated whether the installed anti-virus program is turned on or off. Agents may also ask the user to click their mouse every hour. In order to close this backdoor process, you must locate and delete the slui.exe.mui file. If you don't see that file, you can navigate to the slui.exe folder and locate the slui.exe.mui file. This file is commonly located in the appdata/local directory. If you can't locate the slui.exe.mui file, you can search your PC for the slui.exe folder and look in the following directories:
