Yet, I can't seem to come up with a better solution as far as querying goes. Here's the problem I am trying to solve. I have a table of items. The items can be of multiple different types (each type has its own table though). Each item in the item table has a relationship with a person. This could be the owner of the item or someone who lends the item to another person. This is where I'm at right now: items table id name owner_id lender_id item_type_1 id name owner_id item_type_2 id name owner_id item_type_3 id name owner_id person table id name I would like to be able to query something like SELECT * FROM items LEFT JOIN item_types ON items.id = item_types.item_id LEFT JOIN item_types ON items.id = item_types.item_id WHERE owner_id = 1 AND lender_id = 2 Is there a better way? A: I think this kind of thinking is a common problem with applications that use relational databases. The answer is to normalize your data. You should create a new table to store all of the different types of items: item_types id name This table will contain all of the different types of items that may be included with a particular item. The actual table will contain all of the specific items: items id name owner_id lender_id item_type_id Using your example, the query would be the same as before, except you would use left joins.
